CHARITABLE CARE FOR KIDS LIKE SALEEA

Since she was born, 12-year-old Saleea has grappled with sickle cell disease, a life-threatening blood condition that requires constant treatment. It can be intense, but it's no match for Saleea's winning attitude! "No matter what happens, even if we need to call for help at 3 a.m., we know our medical team is there for us. They're like our second family." - Demont Cornelius, Saleea's dad

ADVANCEMENT SERVICES FOR KIDS LIKE EMMY

With a smile that lights up a room, this spirited preschooler battled and beat a deadly cancer thanks to the expert clinical care and groundbreaking research that saved her life — and the financial assistance that allowed her parents to focus on her health rather than the cost of medical care.

RESEARCH FOR KIDS LIKE MAX AND BECK

Max survived a deadly brain cancer, thanks to an innovative treatment protocol, while his younger brother, Beck, is learning to live with the challenges of OCD and ADHD. They advocate for Seattle Children's brain health initiatives and research along with their family.
